A scatter plot showing the relationship between the number of genes per sample (x-axis) and the number of reads per gene (y-axis). Both axes are on a logarithmic scale. The x-axis ranges from approximately 10,000 to 300,000, with major ticks at 50,000, 100,000, 150,000, 200,000, 250,000, and 300,000. The y-axis ranges from approximately 10 to 100,000, with major ticks at 10, 100, 1,000, 10,000, and 100,000. The data points are represented by blue dots. There is a dense cluster of points in the lower right quadrant, indicating a high number of genes per sample but a low number of reads per gene. Several points are scattered at higher values, particularly for the number of reads per gene, reaching up to 100,000. The overall trend suggests that as the number of genes per sample increases, the number of reads per gene tends to decrease, but with significant variability and outliers.
